HOW SHE CONQUERED.

Friendship and Love Won by the Lack Self-Consciousness.

George Paul, a young civil engineer, while surveying a railway in the Pennsylvania hills, met a plain, lovable little country girl and married her. After a few weeks he brought her home to his family, in New York, and left her there while he returned to camp. Marian had had many plans to win the affections of her new kinsfolk. She had practised diligently at her music, she was sure they would be pleased to hear her stories of her beautiful sister and her brother; she imagined their admiration of her new blue silk gown and winter bonnet. But the Pauls, one and all, were indifferent.

After the first shock of disappointment, Marian summoned her courage.

"If I have nothing to give them, I have much to give me," she thought, cheerfully.

She listened eagerly while Isabel sang, and her smiles and tears showed how keen ly she appreciated the music. She examined Louisa's paintings every day with unflagging interest, discussed every effect, and was happy if she could help mix the colors or prepare the canvas. She questioned grandma about her neuralgia, advised new remedies, or listened unwearied to the account of old ones day after day.

When Uncle John, just returned from Japan, began to describe his adventures, Marian was the only auditor who never grew tired not interrupted him. After two hours' lecture, in which her part had been that of a dumb, bright-faced Sister, Uncle John declared that George's wife was the most intelligent woman he had ever met.

When George came home the whole family was loud in her praise. She was a fine musician; she had unerring taste in art; she was charming, witty and lovable; but George soon saw that she had no them unconsciously; not by displaying her own merits, but by appreciating theirs.

This is a true story in fact, but the truth of its meaning is repeated wherever a woman is found who has the intangible quality called "charm." She may be deformed or pock-marked, but will win friendship and love by the lack of self-consciousness, by her quick sympathy with others.

Many an unattractive girl would save her self much anxiety and vain effort at entrance into the world of society if she understood that it was made up of individuals each of whom desired to find not the beauty, wit or talent of others, but the cordial recognition of their own.

If you can honestly forget yourself and take an interest in others, you will soon find yourself surrounded by hosts of friends; but if you dishonestly affect this interest you will deserve no one. Your dulcet words will be meaningless, your smile a

A FEMALE LOBBYIST.

How She Manages to Gather Honey from Every Honey-Sucking Flower.

"A fine figure of a woman," as Joe DiMaggio observes in "Great Expectations," passes by into the Capitol, sweeping under garniture of silk and genuine seal fur with as broad spread of canvas as the yacht Buena Vista, a volunteer. Her name is Mrs. [REDACTED] ly between forty and forty-five, her figure is practically emblematic, but her face is rosy with health and her features still preserve the stamp of beauty. Her eyes are big and gray, scintillating under the flashes of dark eyelashes and brows, and were her attire less pronounced she would be styled elegant. This lady enters the reception room, and hands her card to several members, who at once respond, and soon she is surrounded by a circle of convers-

This lady is a professional lobbyist, and often has been connected with marked success.

Whispers in the air are heard occasionally in criticism of her private character from those of her own sex, but, says the gallant correspondent of the Kansas City Times, neither man nor woman has ever brought forward an accusation direct and positive so far as it is generally known. She has had her fingers, however, in many a Congressional pin, whereas she received a shower of greater or lesser proportions, and no one is so unmercifully egged in the Senate copy of every bill introduced and of the reports thereon, and if the game be worth the candle, hants up the history and parentage. Then when the case is thoroughly digested she offers to make or mar, as the case may be, wherever the best financial opportunity is presented, and her efforts are usually attended with success. She is abroad, and gathers honey from every honey-bearing source.
